Image Notes:

- Images are arranged beginning with overall campus images (Figs. 1-4), followed by construction images (Figs. 5-9), followed by images of each unit as they are described in the physical description (Figs. 10-60), concluding with images referenced in the statement of significance (Figs. 61-66).

- Images of each unit are arranged in the order they are described in the physical description as it moves around the campus from unit to unit with exterior images presented first and interior images presented second. Within each section of exterior or interior images, contemporary images (meaning 2002 and later) are presented first and historic images presented second.

- In many instances, historic interior images are used for reference in lieu of contemporary interior views as the denial of access to the property prevented proper photo documentation of the interior. The exact degree to which the interiors have changed from their historic conditions is unknown, but based on limited visibility from windows, the majority of the interior finishes appear intact.

- The bulk of the contemporary photographs were taken in March 2016, prior to the anticipation of this nomination. Between March 2016 and the initiation of this nomination, the road leading to the campus was closed. The nominators were unable to revisit the property for more precise photo documentation that would have more closely followed the physical description of the campus and provided a greater amount of detail images.

(Note: The view from the northeast shows the use of several quadrangles, with a principle courtyard on the east side of the chapel. An open walkway or cloister on the west side of the chapel, as well as additional covered walkways surround a grass courtyard, connecting individual buildings and functions of the campus. The campus was not a monolith, but reached into the landscape with separate but engaged volumes, and trees and plantings to blend with the native Northwest forest and vegetation.)

(Note: Maloney’s sketch for the chapel interior shows a high altar with a crucifix suspended from a stylized baldachin. Other Modernist treatments included wood sanctuary screens, metal cone lantern lights, and mosaic Stations of the Cross. Planned colored glass is fitted into the A-frame clerestory.)
